CASTRO IS DANGEROUS

FORTUNATELY, a majority of people in Washington and elsewhere, disagree with Sen. J. William Fulbright's soft-pated observation that Fidel Castro is a nuisance, but not a danger.

One of these is John McCone, the head-man of the Central Intelligence Agency, who believes that Cuba's leading export commodity is subversion—not sugar.

A year ago, McCone reported to a congressional committee that "Castro tells revolutionaries, 'Come to Cuba. We will pay your way, we will train you in underground organization technique, in guerrilla warfare, in sabotage and in terrorism. We will see that you get back to your homeland.'"

* * *

AND IN THIS same vein, the Organization of American States, following a long investigation, said last July:

"Undoubtedly Cuba now constitutes the regional center for subversive action by International Communism in America. This is true not only with regard to the spread of the Communist ideology, but also, and what is more dangerously, because it constitutes a nearby center for training agents of every kind whose function it is to carry on subversion in the countries of the hemisphere. . . ."

The CIA and the OAS are not outfits which would don a fright-wig just to keep people stirred up. They know whereof they speak; that Fidel Castro is a Communist and is a danger, not merely a nuisance, to the entire Western Hemisphere from top to bottom, and will continue to be as long as he holds Cuba in his Red clutches.
